MISS SEARS TAKES UP 'Dad' White Weds Miss Hourin

MOTHER'S CHARITIES Sequel to School Elopement

Famous Society Athletic Girl Will Continue Humanitarian Work.

Miss Eleanor Sears, the most athletic girl in American society up to a few months ago, is today carrying on a new career, the various charities and philanthropies so long practiced by her mother.

Miss Sears is qualified to handle to a great measure the charity work to which her mother had become so well accustomed.

The first quality which has made Miss Sears prominent in New York, Newport and California is her thoroughness.

"Whatever is worth doing, it is worth doing well," is a motto in which she believes implicitly.

At times she became an expert player, fast on the serve, clever on the back-hand return, a hard volleyer and accurate on the drive.

The swimming at Bailey's Beach, Newport, set records the men could not touch. She handles a horse better than most men.

An auto is a bore to her hands. She never has had a car, but she has had a car for her mother, but not to such an extent as her mother had. Mrs. Charles H. Sears was a philanthropist.

She served on the boards of various charitable organizations, she contributed liberally. She gave personal help in addition to her known charities, she had many private ones, especially in Haverhill, where she passed the summer years.

When Mrs. Sears passed away three months ago the many charities which she had established remained waiting for some one else to guide them.

Her task has fallen most naturally on the daughter's shoulders. But it is no light responsibility.

The lack of any other of charity is that it must not be indiscriminate or loosely applied at any cost.

Mrs. Sears put charities at Beverly Farms will be continued by the daughter. The personal visits will be made to the same, where Mrs. Sears was known as a ministering angel.

Mrs. Sears was on the board of managers of the Rockefeller Memorial, which is the Trinity Church House for the aged. Mrs. Sears will undoubtedly take her place upon that board.

Miss Sears, her friends say, is deeply impressed by the extent of her mother's charities. They constitute a worthy inheritance in them.

Trinity House for the aged, Trinity Church, Church Home for Orphaned and Destitute Children (Boston), St. Luke's Home for Careless Children (Boston), Massachusetts' Blind Hospital, Industrial School for Crippled and Deformed Children, Episcopal City Mission, Boston Hospital, Boston Mission House under St. James of the Three Penny Lane, Episcopal House and Foreign Missions.

FINGER PRINTS TRAP HIM. Paul Richter's Record Revealed by Impressions.

The Superior court in the Boston Police Department is responsible for bringing Paul Richter, a dapper young man of Springfield with a string of aliases and a record as a driving New England jockey, to justice.

This well educated young robber is wearing out a $200 pair of shoes in his renewed weapon. Whatever other punishment he may receive will be due to the system of identification by fingerprints.

He was arrested by State Detective Daly at Shelburne Falls and committed to the Essex County Jail at Greenfield. His finger impressions were taken. Yesterday Chief Inspector Tipton of this city received the impressions. In a short time Detective Davidson and Chaffin, experts in such work, had perfected the man's record.

THUG'S BLOW FATAL TO BOSTON VISITOR

Frank R. Horton of Watertown Dies of Attack Made on Tremont Street.

Frank R. Horton of Watertown, who was admitted to a room at Tremont street on the night of January 21, died at the Hotel Hamilton yesterday.

The death of Horton has created a sensation in the police department in Boston. Horton received a fractured skull and during the entire week was unable to recognize relatives.

The assault is alleged to have taken place in front of No. 127 Tremont street shortly after midnight. Horton and James J. Egan of Waltham were walking down Tremont street and were approached by two strangers. A young fellow wearing dark clothes and a dark soft hat, but having a glow in his hand with a black jack.

Egan gave chase but was unable to catch either one of the pair. The police say that they have a good description of the times and an arrest is likely to be made within a few days. Horton was about thirty-five and lived alone. Two years ago he was laid a fortune by an aunt.

Happier as Wife Than as Pup. Little Miss White, who is a large, dark-eyed and intelligent little girl, says she is much happier in being the wife of her father's brother than she was as his pupil. The husband, who is just twenty-three, is of a friendly and apparently contented life with the wife of a girl who is a student of the law at Harvard.

Harry F. White found all his reading about the law in the old days. It was not as easy as he figured it would be. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years.

He abandoned his studies and dashed to Boston. He took an automobile for him and found the news correct. He moved the neighborhood town without any of the fugitives. They were returned to Boston on Friday. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years.

Mr. White explained that Margaret and Miss Hourin were married, and marriage quickly was his only object. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years.

irate Father Pursues Couple Across Several States, but Capitulates at Last.

"Dad" White, the football hero of Fordham University, has been followed by his father across several states, but has capitulated at last.

The young people were recently married by a ceremony which was the culmination of a most unusual romance. Court proceedings have been in New York, an elopement to the West, a chase by an angry father and the granting of a special dispensation by Cardinal Farley were features.

Tomblike people were "at home" in their little furnished room at No. 321 East Fifty-sixth street, where they will live until young White's suit is found to start housekeeping.

Like every other young man, White has his own ideas and his own way of doing things. He is a student of the law at Harvard for two years. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years. He was a student of the law at Harvard for two years.

ASTONISHING WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC HERE

Secret Service Agents Say Conditions in Boston Are Far Worse Than in N. Y.

Starting conditions have been reported in the Federal Service Agents who have been detailed here by the department of justice to run down white slave cases. The secret service men have uncovered a mass of evidence indicating the hold and inhuman methods used to procure and traffic with the Federal officials who are strongly organized in this city.

They found that the men and women who are in business in violation of the Mann act use counterfeit marriage certificates to make themselves legal. Two agents who have made personal visits to certain neighborhoods of the city say they can furnish the Boston police with the names and names of fifty to one hundred white slave cases within the radius of a square of a mile.

Local police and religious organizations are aroused and know of the Federal officials. Ever since the Sunday afternoon edition of the Boston Herald, which was published last week, the city has been in a state of excitement over the report of the secret service men.

LABOR DECLARES WAR UPON STEEL TRUST

40,000 Called Out on Strike in Pittsburgh District, and Others to Follow.

PITTSBURGH, Feb. 1.—War was declared today by the American Federation of Labor on the United States Steel Corporation. Following a mass meeting of strikers today afternoon, Frank L. Harrison, secretary of the federation, issued a call for a general strike in all the steel producing mills in the Pittsburgh district. "We will invade the steel corporation's home," he said.

Marion declares that the general strike in the great better world standard steel mill will cause the steel corporation to be unable to continue the strike here for a year. The steel trust is ready to spend millions to prevent the closing of its mills and to win its way to the steel for the betterment of working conditions.

This is the first step in our big fight for recognition by the steel trust. It is a big fight. A battle of this kind will be taken up by the steel trust. It is a big fight. Lieut. Becker in Death House Hears of Birth

Baby Daughter's Condition Unstable. Factory, but Wife Bears Ordeal Bravely.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—A message and to Charles Becker, former police lieutenant, under sentence of death in Sing Sing for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, his wife announced the birth of a daughter to Mrs. Becker in the Women's Hospital. Mrs. Becker has been anxious regarding his wife's condition and arrangements had been made for the message to be delivered to her at once.

Mrs. Becker was reported tonight as doing very well, but the baby's condition is far from satisfactory. "We hope to get it through" was all the hospital physicians would say.

Mrs. Becker several days ago expressed the wish that the child might be a boy, to grow up to be the kind of a man as her husband was.

INCREASE OF MOTOR LICENSE FEES IS NOT NECESSARY

TOURING CAR OF FRENCH TYPE POINTED RADIATOR IS A MARKED FEATURE

Many Measures Covering Many Motor Conditions. Are Being Considered by the Learned Men Under the Gilded Dome of the State House

By J. C. KERRISON.

It is not probable that the increase of motor license fees will be necessary, according to the learned men under the gilded dome of the state house. The committee on motor legislation, which has been considering the matter for some time, has concluded that the present rates are sufficient to cover the cost of the license and the cost of the motor. The committee has also considered the question of the increase of the motor license fees, but has concluded that it is not necessary. More Cruel Than Any Savage Is Child Labor Cruelty

MINISTERS in hundreds of churches are preaching against child labor—may their sermons be powerful; as savage in denunciation as words can make them. Would that there might stand, in every pulpit beside the preacher, one half-starved, worked-out, white-faced, hollow-chested victim of the child-labor system. The sight of such a child would do more to arouse the people than any hundred sermons or editorials.

Men feel and hate the wrongs that they SEE. It is hard for them to imagine the unseen.

The preacher who is sincere, who believes what he preaches, and FEELS what he believes, preaches on child labor, as he can preach on nothing else. For that which is done to the feeblest child, according to the Bible's teaching, is done to Christ Himself—and the sufferings that child labor inflict upon children equal in horror and exceed by many years in length of time the suffering inflicted upon the founder of Christianity.

Under the child-labor system, a few men get rich, the public buys products for a cheaper price—DON'T FORGET THAT FEATURE OF THE SYSTEM—and the children are used up as though they were fuel to be shovelled living into the furnace of mill, factory, sweatshop or cannery, AND COME OUT BURNED TO ASHES.

Lack of sleep, lack of air, lack of sunshine, long, dreary years without play or any happiness, hard blows for the poor, weak, half-starved creature that does at its task, a cheap and early grave for tens of thousands, and life stunted for ALL—such are features of the child-labor system.

We show you on this page pictures of a savage delighting in collecting the heads or the scalps of his enemies, and a modern business savage, delighting in capturing and destroying, for profit, thousands of children that have done him no harm.

Is not the cold-blooded devil of business infinitely more of a savage than the wild head-hunting, body-torturing beasts of the forest? If there were a real and burning hell, would not the exploiter of child labor be found in the hottest spot?

The Indian buried his tomahawk in a man's brain, scalped him, and that was the end. Or the victim was caught live, tortured for a while, and THAT was the end. Is not the cruelty that tortures the child as long as it can be kept alive infinitely more shameful, criminal and horrible?

You have read of the Indians that captured a mother and her young child, and tortured the mother by compelling her to witness the torture of her child.

The mother was tied to a tree, close to the child, and compelled to look on, while the child was put to death in slow agony.

Horrible! you say! Too horrible to be believed; human ferocity could not be guilty of such a crime.

Here Is as Good a Cartoon on Child Labor as You Could Ask to See. Which Is More Cruel, the Savage That Hunts Down and Beheads His Victim, Inflicting a Few Moments of Suffering, or the Exploiter of Child Labor, Exhausting the Vitality of Children Through Long Years of Misery? Is Not the Head Hunting or Scalp Hunting Savage Less Barbarous Than the Child Labor Savage of Our Day?

WHY do you say so?

Worse things are done in thousands of mills and factories and sweatshops all over this country—and who cares?

You would run mules and risk your life to help that wretched mother tied and watching her child suffer torture.

How far will you run, how earnestly will you protest, how independently will you vote to save THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS UNDERGOING AN AGONY AS GREAT? There is less suffering for one mother watching her child tortured to death in a few hours, at most, than for thousands of mothers that must watch their children slowly dying under the child-labor system.

The modern mother of the child-labor victim is not tied to a tree, with red Indians howling around her. But she is tied by poverty, and as helpless as though tied with ropes.

You can imagine partly how the woman, caught by Indians, felt as she strained at the cords that held her to the tree. You can imagine her shrieks, her pitiful calling upon God for help, as she watched those Indians put red-hot splinters into her child's flesh.

You FEEL all that.

WE MUST SEND THEM OUT TO PLAY

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Now much there is need of doing must not be done in haste.

But slowly and with patience, as a jungle is changed to a town.

But listen, my Brothers, listen: it is not always so.

When a murderer's hand is lifted to kill, there is no time to waste; And the way to change his purpose is first to knock him down And teach him the law of kindness after you give him the blow.

The acorn you plant in the morning will not give shade at noon;

And the thornless cactus must be bred by year on year of toil.

But listen, my Brothers, listen: it is not ever the way.

For the roots of the poison ivy plant you cannot pull too soon; If you would better your garden, and make the most of your soil, Hurry and dig up the evil things, and cast them out today.

The ancient sins of the nations no law can ever efface;

We must wait for the mothers of men to grow and give clean souls to their sons.

But listen, my Brothers, listen: when a child cries out in pain

We must rise from the banquet board and go, though the host is saying grace; We must rise and find the Herod of Greed who is killing our little ones; Nor ever go back to the banquet until the monster is slain.

The strong man waits for justice with lifted soul and eyes,

As a sturdy oak will face the storm and does not break or bow.

But listen, my Brothers, listen: the child is a child for a day;

If a merciless foot treads down each shoot, how can the forest rise?

We are robbing the race when we rob a child; we must rescue the children NOW;

We must rescue the little slaves of Greed and send them out to play.

Can you not also feel for the mother that must drag her feeble child from bed at 5 in the morning "to go to work"?

Can you not feel for the mothers, that, long, after dark, see their little children come home from the mill, and sink into heavy sleep, too much exhausted even to eat the miserable food that is ready for them?

Can you not feel for the mother painfully dragging herself to work, children tired and white-faced walking to the mill beside her, and a child unborn, and almost ready to be delivered, moving within her?

Is not THAT torture, to conquer nature's plea for rest, to send one child after another to the mill and to the grave, and to know that the child unborn must go the same road?

We are not better than savages, but worse. For the Indian was ignorant and had not enjoyed "the blessed advantages of nineteen hundred years of Christian teaching."

And the Indian did not torture those of his own tribe.

In England they found that there were not enough full-sized men to supply even England's small army. Man after man was measured and found hollow-chested, and TOO SMALL.

ONE GENERATION OF CHILD LABOR, following mechanical inventions that made child labor profitable, had brought about this change in England's men. The women had also degenerated, many of them lived on tea, gin, and bread, and bore babies called "wasters," that no science could keep alive more than a few days after birth. They, too, testified to GREAT Britain's child-labor system, and the system of working women, which included fastening a chain to the working woman's neck, passing it back between her legs, and making her—thus harnessed—crawl on her hands and knees, pulling small coal cars through the lowest galleries in the mines. Those women had their knees and the palms of their hands as hard as a cow's hoof. Do you wonder that there was degeneration among the poor of England?

But England has made the fight that we have not made. The brutality inflicted on children in this country would not be permitted in England.

We have not seen the full result as yet, for we have been burning up children so fast that they have not lived to make degenerate men and women, and immigration brings constant fresh supplies.

But we shall see the results—and horrible results—if the country proves so heartless as to make no efficient protest against the torturing of the child in sight of all mother—AND OF THE VOTER.

EVERY Sunday should be child-labor day, and the grip of the church, temple, Legislature and nation and lay the founds shall cease in this country of universal civilization.

Dr. Haig's investigations of uric acid, and the results, as reported in his book, "The Uric Acid Diet," have been the subject of much discussion. The book is a masterpiece of research, and it is the only one of its kind. Purposes of the Forthcoming Exhibition by the "Revolutionists" Who Believe the Old Masters Should Be Destroyed, and That True Art Cannot Even Imitate Nature, Explained by a Distinguished American Leader of the Movement

His unprejudiced little guide to the artist with its chapters on the headquarters for so-called "Futurists" in this country and their visiting comrades of other countries. As all these artists of the new movement desire names and labels, they have distinguished Alfred Stieglitz's modest achievement by making it famous the world over. The book is a very interesting volume. Mr. Stieglitz's article, printed on page 44, has contributed to 1944 next to page 44 in the form of an interview.)

Individual independence, both in expression and in acceptance or rejection of whatever is expressed—that is the principle of those who are trying to influence the taste of the living region of art.

Hummel's twirling exercises make him popular. He has been a compound of these things. His exercises enable you to play on the piano—make him immortal. Yet Hummel said Berlioz was a too pianist, and a worse composer. But when you hear the "Sonata Pathétique" for piano, you are particularly what Hummel, the great pianist, would exercise, then, and about it.

Now Marin—being as efficient as he is earnest and sincere in his art—has tried to explain in words what he is trying to express with his brush. What he can afford some enlightenment for your eyes are about what such men are striving to accomplish. Marin says:

"I shall we consider the life of a great city as confined mainly to the concrete structures in the streets and in the buildings. Are the things that we see and add? We have been told somewhere that a work of art is a thing alive. You cannot create work of art unless the things you behold respond to something within you. Therefore, if these buildings move me, they, too, must have life. Thus the whole city—its streets, buildings, people, all are alive; and the more they move me the more I love them."

Bawling About the Ball - - -

By LEWIS ALLEN

Some Startling Letters That Might Have Been Written to President-Elect Wilson Upon Learning That He Will Not Stand for an Inaugural Ball.

TEN HUNDRED, UPPERKRUST AVE.
MY DEAR WOODROW
Although I have never met you, surely you can appreciate the fact that I am willing to recognize you now as one of our own social set. With these formalities over, allow me to write you a word of protest. Surely you cannot be serious when you state that you do not approve of an Inaugural Ball.
I know you cannot understand, and I am sure you will change your mind and allow the ball to be held when I inform you that I have already ordered my power for the event. I have also had my pictures taken in this gown and sent them about to the various newspapers for use on the morning after.
Furthermore, I have gone to great expense and much suffering to have my neck and features properly lacquered, and I can assure you I planned to honor you by wearing at least thirty-eight pounds more of diamonds than I ever before wore by one individual at an Inaugural Ball since the beginning of our little kingdom--or is it a colony or something? I know it is not a Republic, but these minor details do bother me so.
Now, my dear Woodrow, consider yourself one of our upper set, and be a good fellow and order the ball. You are, I have been told, a man of some education. Surely you can understand that our country could be of so value whatever to us who are of the socially elect were it not for the social functions at the capital. In fact, what else is a national capital for?
Yours socially,
MRS. GROVELLIN DE STILE.
NO. 5555 WALL STREET, N. Y.
WOODROW WILSON, ESQ., Princeton, N. J.
SIR:
From statements credited to you in the current great protests against it now if you don't hold these inaugural ball we will not have nothing to protest against and we will have lost the money we have now spent in writing and having pamphlets printed against it, so beware and hold these inaugural ball.

PRINCETON, N. J., ORANGE HALL.
TO THE Honorable, the President-elect, Woodrow Wilson:
Dear Presy:
Sir, old boy, we are so sorry that you are not going to hold the inaugural ball. Can't you see we Princeton chaps have planned to cut a wide swath down there, giving the Yale chaps the big lead, don't you know? A lot of us have run considerably into debt securing tops for the occasion.
Now, for the sake of dear, old Princeton, Presy, take another fling on this and enter in the inaugural ball, otherwise all the other college chaps will call us pukes. Roosevelt gave the Harvard boys a chance and won, and the Yale fellows in good. Princeton never before had a press, so be a good sport and hold the ball.
Yours fraternal,
ONE OF THE PRINCETON BOYS
CITY.
M. W. WILSON:
Dear Sir:
We hope you are not going to allow the inaugural ball. Do you realize this is going to prevent about one hundred and seventy-five active dressmakers from getting an opportunity to attend and copy all the latest creations? Every four years we dressmakers attend the Inaugural Ball and copy enough advance styles to keep us going in affluence until next election. You are actually taking the bread out of our mouths.

MRS. CUTTIPAL
Pres. Active Dressmaker.
WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE LEAGUE, CITY.
WOODROW WILSON, ESQ.:
SIR:
We had hoped that you were a fair-minded man. We did not expect too much of you because, unfortunately, you are a man who, when we learned that you had resigned the Inaugural Ball we were greatly incensed. In fact, it is most unfair.
The point of it is this: You doubtless know the names of men who, knowing that you are deliberately pulling off the ball, knowing that if we appeared there in our inaugural ball costumes we would influence a great many men in our behalf.
In other words, you wish to eliminate our sex entirely. We are allowed to vote in Congress or the Senate. We hold no political office and have nothing to say about the running of the Government, and yet because it is the opportunity to even appear amongst the officeholders at the capital!
We expected more fairness--an idea. Think of it, we are shut out politically and we would shut us out socially. You may shut us out, but YOU CANNOT SHUT US UP. Take our mild warning, hold the Inaugural Ball and give us our chance, otherwise--remember, some of our number are going to march to Washington soon!
Indignantly,
JMA TARTAR,
Cor. Sec. Local W. B. L.

Dear Sir:
You make the big mistake when you shall not let them rich sawtooth peoples run the inaugural ball. It is a great thing for us sawtooths. It gives us the chance to make the big speeches and with the big protest against the wicked waste of the people's money. As usual we planned to do the same but we are all dead. We have written the speeches describing your inaugural ball and already have we paid to have printed her male comrades to shield her from danger or to contribute to her comfort in the camp, she was constantly, in the intervals of actual fighting, performing the womanly services of a nurse in the field hospital.

Many of these women warriors actually led charges and are entitled to credit for the capture of Turkish guns and prisoners. It was at Kirk Kallase that Sophie Govanovitch resolved to take what the colonel of her regiment declared at the time to be a "forlorn hope"—a Turkish battery located at a commanding point which it seemed impossible to silence. Its fire was murderous, and every moment that passed required its capture seemingly more impossible.

The sight of the slaughter in their ranks, so disheartening to the men, had the contrary effect upon the women of whom there were nearly two scores engaged in the assault at that point. They seemed to understand intuitively that what was pending was to annihilate and disconcert the Turks with a brilliant charge up the hill. It was a reckless thing to do, but Sophie Govanovitch knew that if the women headed it the remnant of the regiment would follow, the living scrambling over the bodies of the dead, and probably would take the Turkish battery by surprise.

She made her heroic proposition to her women comrades, quietly. They accepted it joyously, with flashing eyes. With bayonets fixed they gathered about their youthful leader. Sophie Govanovitch suddenly seized the sword of a fallen lieutenant, and with the little band of women at her heels, every one of them mad for battle, dashed up the slope, waving her sword and shouting:

"Onward, my brave sisters—death to the Turk!"

So quickly they advanced that the Turkish shells and bullets were flying harmlessly—for the moment—above their heads. For the time necessary to draw a full breath or to the men of Sophie's regiment gaped at the spectacle in astonishment. Then, with a yell of exultation, swords and bayonets flashing, they dashed after the women. So extraordinary, so utterly unexpected, was the spectacle that for a fatal moment the men at the Turkish guns forgot themselves. When they realized that the women of the regiment, which this day had so gloriously succeeded in silencing one of their fiercest adversaries, were among the unsolved mysteries of warfare, it was too late to retrieve a lost cause, it was too late to change the course of their heavy artillery. If the artillery that support them could not stop the enemy's charge, the battery was lost.

Sophie Govanovitch, champion of the hour, was the first of the little party to reach the Turkish guns. Her two scores of women comrades followed close at her back; and now they were in the thick of the charging ranks of men that had dashed after them. Half a dozen exchanges of musketry followed, and the Turks got the worst of it, and the heroines of the hour were at the enemy's throats with their bayonets.

Perhaps those Turks, who had been so confident of their cat, hare-bred play, had not been so sure of their eyes if they were eager to see the women of the hour.

It was all over then. With the Turkish guns, the Turkish force at that point was annihilated. An entire Turkish battery was added to the allies' trophies of war.

No woman in that brilliant charge was killed, and a score slightly wounded. The two hundred and fifty men who were the example had inspired with such valor lost to a score of their number in dead and dangerously wounded.

Sophie Govanovitch insisted that the women warriors should share equally with her the plaudits and honors of the army at Kirk Kallase. It is in that army that men are anxious and jealous of one another in every condition of life, there is no evidence that they carried on such passions to the war with them.

They remembered only the generations of oppressions and outrages which their country and their families had suffered at the hands of their Moslem overlords, and burned for a righteous vengeance upon them—nothing less than their eviction forever from European soil.

INDOMITABLE little Bulgarians, with its undying hatred of Turkey and all Turks, has not one but hundreds of Joans of Arc, who shed their blood on the battlefields where the Balkan allies so lately triumphed over their hereditary enemy.

These brave and patriotic women—some of them maidens in the flush of their early maturity—are now returning to their homes as fast as they can be spared at the various army headquarters. It can be imagined how they are welcomed—with all the honors and demonstrations of pride and affection that are characteristic of the Balkan peoples.

These women enlisted for active service as naturally as did every able-bodied man of the town and the farm. When the last call came for more volunteers to strengthen the attack upon the Turkish last line of defense that barred the victors from Constantinople, and all that remained were very old men and youths of sixteen and seventeen, hundreds of women dropped their work of the house, dairy and farm and asserted their right to aid in the overthrow of the Turk. Those atrocities were tragic memories in so many Christian families.

They had seen their children, husbands and brothers butchered, their homes and villages looted and burned. The women sacrificed with a religious fervor which achieved glory to Mohammedans in the name of the Cross. The women, especially, in the Balkan armies were influenced by a personal as well as a national prejudice against the Turks.

Often they refused to wait until all the available men were enlisted, so eager were they to see their hated oppressors driven back into Asia. It was no unusual sight to see a father and mother, both armed and equipped for active service in the field, bidding their children farewell—perhaps never to see them again.

That as soldiers, fighting shoulder to shoulder with their men, they save excellent accounts of themselves is attested by many of the wounded sent home from Lule Burgas, Kirk Kallase and Adrianople. The women warriors of Bulgaria and Serbia showed an amount of fortitude in the trenches before Adrianople that spurred their men comrades to extraordinary deeds. Instead of seeking or accepting any remissions of discipline or other advantages on account of their sex, they cheerfully endured every hardship and fought as veritable Amazons.

It is related of Sophie Govanovitch, the nineteen-year-old warrior maiden so widely celebrated as the "Serbian Joan of Arc," that far from accepting any efforts on the part of

The Advantages of Being Ugly

Why the Homely Woman Wins the Prizes of Life and the Beauty Loses, Explained by Arthur Stringer, the Brilliant Novelist, Whose Own Wife Is a Famous American Beauty

By ARTHUR STRINGER.

Here Are the Two Women Mr. Stringer Calls the Most Fascinatingly Ugly in the World—Miss Polaire and Mistinguette, Both of Paris, and Rivals for the Crown of Ugliness.

The Clover Cartoon by Sem, the First of French Picture Satirists, Shows the "Frog Face" of Which Polaire Is So Proud. The Equally Clever Cartoon of Mistinguette by Lucillier Brings Out Her "Owl Eyes," Her Flattened Horse Face, Intense Anger and Big Feet—of All Which She Is as Proud as Polaire Is of Her "Wasp Waist." Which Is Only Twelve Inches Around, Her Great Flat Feet, Enormous Mouth and Other Points of Ugliness.

"If I had a small daughter whose face was long and narrow, suggesting the horse, or short and broad, suggesting the owl; if her eyes were out of plumb and her nose crooked and her mouth inclined to monopolize her face; if her figure inclined to the proportions of a cane or a feather bed, I would give her this sincere counsel:

"My daughter, be glad you are ugly, for you will get what you want and keep what you get—and that is life as we all want it to be."

So says Mr. Stringer in This Interesting Article, and Miss Polaire and Mistinguette Bear Him Out Entirely.

THE BEAUTY who wins the prizes of life is the homely woman. She is the woman who is not perfect, who is not beautiful, who is not the ideal of the world. She is the woman who is not the ideal of the world, who is not the ideal of the world, who is not the ideal of the world.

My daughter, be glad you are ugly, for you will get what you want and keep what you get—and that is life as we all want it to be. I maintain that this is true. It is the testimony of all human experience, filtered through thought, that it is true.

What we perfectly understand each other, suppose we define ugliness. It is the opposite of beauty. Beauty is harmony of form and feature and coloring. Ugliness is the lack of harmony. If we follow the standards of loveliness set by the Greeks, who have long been dead, every woman is ugly who is not perfect, whose nose is a twentieth of an inch too short, or whose ears are set a little too close to her head.

In short, whatever exceeds anything of the classic standard is ugly, any lack of perfection, the possession of any defect, is ugliness in its essence.

In the broad sense, ugliness is a marked distinction from the ideal. Yet that very distance from the standard renders a woman attractive. I have heard persons of discriminating taste, those about whom we hear as the best, say of their fish mouth, her big feet, her ridiculously small waist, she is the most attractive woman in Paris.

So says of Mistinguette, Polaire's rival. She is grotesque—but grotesquely beautiful, and so attractive that they say.

And they are right. It is the imperfect that really appeals to man. He cherishes the Venus with the lost arms. In woman he likes a few warm faults. He learns to prize a woman for her likeable failings, if she have the tact to stop their exercise short of the point of irritation.

He likes to point out her failings in a good-natured way and the Scotch proverb is true, that whom we love we tease. A man likes a woman who sits in him a half-paternal affection. The flaws in her perfection may be of the body or the character. He cares little which. But if the lack be one of inches, that causes her to look up to him, or, if it be of character, that causes her to look down to him, he is content.

There is a twilight zone at twenty-eight or thirty, wherein she is no longer really beautiful, but where she can be made to look beautiful. Here she enters into what is usually a disastrous competition with her uglier sisters, for they, too, can be made to look attractive.

The beautiful woman begins life wrong. She is a mollusc, to whom the tide of life brings everything she desires at first. If she has inherited strophes through inaction for to succeed she has only to smile for a time, but a very little time, as compared with the long stretch of a woman's life.

The possession of beauty involves its studious preservation. Authorities agree that it is hard work to be a beauty. This self-conscious exploitation of self, in time, has a devastating effect upon the character. The woman who spends most of her day in being rubbed and scrubbed and scrubbed has very little time left for anything else.

The first excuse given is that the unattached man has the chance of a better time. He is entertained more lavishly to more social functions—he is paid more attention.

Mrs. Arthur Stringer (Jobyna Howland), Who Was Gibson's Handsomest Model, but Who, According to Mr. Stringer's Theory, Would Be Still More Successful if Ugly

She keeps away the wrinkles, but she also keeps away the ideas. Even lines can lend a least full suggestion of youth. As we know the much massaged and lineless beauty of forty, whose face is like a pressed-out ribbon. And you, too, are fairly sure to be cured, that her soul is as flat as her face.

Modern woman's invasion of the industrial and professional field has changed the old heroic idea of beauty. The face of the woman of 1915 has grown stronger, the lines firmer, the eyes more courageous, the expression more variable. The woman with a bra has found out that she need never fear the passing of mere physical beauty. For her brain has changed the old heroic idea of beauty.

Why So Many Husbands Pose as Bachelors

POSSIBLY the most common excuse for a man's failure to marry is that he is a bachelor. He is a bachelor, he says, because he is a bachelor. He is a bachelor, he says, because he is a bachelor. He is a bachelor, he says, because he is a bachelor.

LIFE IN NEW YORK'S UNDERWORLD

Jack Rose

The Gambling Partner of Lieutenant Becker and Chief Witness Against Him for the Murder of Herman Rosenthal

WHEN it was first announced that a Lieutenant of Police planned and ordered the murder of Rosenthal, very few believed it. And even now that Lieutenant Becker sits in the death-house cell it is commonly believed that the Rosenthal murder was an exceptional case. It is almost impossible for the citizens of New York to grasp the idea that murder has been the habit and the policy of the police when danger threatens.

I have explained—and thousands of pages of sworn testimony now in District Attorney Whitman's hands have proved—that the police and the criminals work together in business partnership. In a widespread criminal partnership like this, involving thousands of partners and some $16,000,000 of graft every year, disputes, jealousies, enmities and conflicting interests arise. In business life these conflicts are settled by the courts; in police grafting these troubles cannot be taken to the courts—they are settled by the fatal police club or the pistol.

No one person knows all the murders the police commit in a year. I know of a sufficient number to prove what I say.

But murder is not always necessary. To send a marked man to Sing Sing for a few years is often better and serves the purpose of a warning to others. When the police kill a bothersome person little is said; but when a man is "framed-up" and sent to jail, the police pass the word around to impress the object lesson on the underworld.

With the help of the Sullivan no-pistol law it is possible for the police to send any citizen of New York to Sing Sing. Any reader of this page can be arrested on a trivial charge, a pistol dropped into his coat pocket by the policeman, and then brought into court charged with a State-prison offense—the possession of a pistol.

And one thing more. Like the doctors and the lawyers, the Police "System" has a code of professional ethics. If a policeman is in trouble, his brother officers must go to his rescue. Any necessary amount of perjured testimony can be furnished at any time to swear to the innocence of an accused policeman. But do not accept my mere assertions—read the unanswerable proof of all this as I present it on this page.

JACK ROSE.

And How the Police

"System" Manufactures Perjured Evidence When a Policeman Is in Trouble

Written for This Page by Jack Rose.

TWELVE years ago James McAuliffe, whose testimony against Edward G. Glennon, Chief Inverry's ward man, resulted in the conviction of that policeman for neglect of duty, was found dying on Sixth avenue, near Fifth street. He died without recovering consciousness.

It was asserted that he had been struck by a trolley car. The official records showed that he had been arrested the night before for intoxication and thrust into a cell in the West Fourteenth street police station, and that the following morning he had been discharged in the police car.

Investigation, however, seemed to indicate that he was never arrested in the police car, a dummy having been procured for the magistrate and formally discharged. In the meantime McAuliffe had been beaten nearly to death in his cell in the police station and then conveyed in a cab to the spot where he was shortly afterward found.

Nine years ago William O'Brien, an ex-convict, testified in open court that Arthur Malton, a policeman, had shot and killed Robert Driscoll. On O'Brien's testimony Malton was convicted of manslaughter and sent to Sing Sing for twenty years. Within eight months O'Brien was found in the Bowery dying from a shot fired by an unknown assailant.

A couple of years later "Lefty" Boyle, a pickpocket, confessed that he had committed many crimes in partnership with policemen, with whom he had divided the proceeds. As a result of this confession several policemen were indicted a few days before their trial was to come up. "Lefty" Boyle, an indispensable witness against the accused policemen, was found in the Tenderloin dying from a pistol shot. Only a few months ago Herman Rosenthal, a gambler, informed the District Attorney that he was in partnership with Lieutenant Becker, of the Sixties, Alvin Karpis, before Rosenthal could tell more, as he threatened to do, he was murdered by three hired by Becker.

These cases do not stand alone. They are mentioned here simply because they stand out most prominently as a few of the similar outrages perpetrated by the police system whenever its safety is in danger.

Police "Frame-Up" Victims

Thousands of men besides McAuliffe, O'Brien, Boyle and I could have paid the penalty of their readiness in defying the police system, although not all have suffered death. In Sing Sing the present time there are but a few men innocent of the crimes of which they were convicted—the victims of police "frame-ups."

Some of these men no doubt were really criminals, and although convicted as the result of police trickery, they were getting no more than they just deserve. Others, however, were innocent. One man came was a man that had offended the police system.

Each of the four cases I have referred to more or less, of a fair at the time, but the facts were not for the time. It is necessary to consider some of these cases together to find out what it really signifies.

I would like to repeat here what I have already said before, that not all of the police are crooked. Of the 10,000 men on the force I do not believe a score more than a thousand are grafters or in partnership with criminals. Nine policemen out of ten are honest—it is among the police officials and the criminals that the cause of their crime lies.

Under the case of McAuliffe, whose body, with skull broken and crushed, was found on the Sixth avenue car tracks—injuries of such peculiar nature that the doctors unhesitatingly declared they could not have been caused by a fall or a single blow. But why should anybody want to kill McAuliffe? And if anybody was interested in killing McAuliffe, why was he not surrounded by the police as the most splendidly devised machinery for putting both innocent citizens out of the way. An objectionable person is arrested on some pretense and a pistol dropped into his pocket on the way to the station house. He is marched up to the lieutenant's desk and the order is given, "Search the prisoner."

With much ostentation a pistol is pulled out of the prisoner's pocket before the eyes of half a dozen spectators—and instantly the trivial charge on which the man was arrested is changed to a felony. The evidence is overwhelming, and the Sullivan law ingeniously gives no discretion to the judge. Unless a miracle intervenes you surely go to Sing Sing for seven years!

The horror of the possibilities of such wickedness is dulled by the common belief that no such thing would really happen—that the police do not, as a matter of fact, "frame-up" innocent people. But so long a time that Mayor Gaynor himself in a public complaint has charged the police with the practice of making "frame-ups" of innocent people.

What happened to McAuliffe? Exactly what happened to McAuliffe in the station house that night is difficult to prove, although persons living in the neighborhood declared that they had seen a man in the station house being pitilessly, "Don't hit me again!" It was said that McAuliffe was clubbed to death in his cell.

The next morning about 9 o'clock a disheveled man stood in front of the police station, and, according to several witnesses, into this cell the inert body of a man whose face was covered with blood was thrown by two policemen. Twenty-five minutes later, according to other witnesses, the body of a man was thrown out of a cab at Sixth avenue and Fifth street, within a few feet of the spot where the dying McAuliffe was found a few minutes later. His skull was fractured and he suffered numerous other injuries which doctors testified could not have been caused by a fall or a single blow. McAuliffe died without regaining consciousness.

During the time which elapsed between the two cab incidents a man was arrested in the West Fifty-fourth street Police Court as James McAuliffe and discharged by Mayor Gaynor. Magistrate Mayo subsequently declared that the man was discharged as McAuliffe bore no resemblance to the real McAuliffe as far as he could judge by photographs. The police, however, had brought into court a "dummy" to impersonate the prisoner, who had been clubbed to death in the station house.

Despite all this strong circumstantial evidence, the special John Doe inquiry instituted by the mayor into the death of McAuliffe was unable to fasten the murder on the police, although James Mayo, who presided, decided that the injuries which resulted in the man's death were sustained after he was arrested for intoxication.

This fact stands out uncontradicted. The man whose testimony had resulted in the conviction of one policeman and was to be used against five others then was thrown to the hands of the police a whole night and was found dead the next morning from wounds which doctors testified could not possibly have resulted from a fall or a single blow.

It is not always necessary to witness to remove danger and dispose of bothersome people by assassination—the police have other resources. The police "frame-up" is always available and usually effective. It is the "frame-up" that is the real terror of the criminals of the underworld—it is the fear of "frame-up" that causes the partnership between the police and the criminals.

And it is the fear of a "frame-up" that sells the mouths of hundreds of honest citizens who dare not expose police corruption. No man who walks the streets of New York is free from a "frame-up." The Sullivan law, which makes it a State prison offense to possess a pistol, has been weaponized by the police as the most splendidly devised machinery for putting both innocent citizens out of the way. An objectionable person is arrested on some pretense and a pistol dropped into his pocket on the way to the station house. He is marched up to the lieutenant's desk and the order is given, "Search the prisoner."

With much ostentation a pistol is pulled out of the prisoner's pocket before the eyes of half a dozen spectators—and instantly the trivial charge on which the man was arrested is changed to a felony. The evidence is overwhelming, and the Sullivan law ingeniously gives no discretion to the judge. Unless a miracle intervenes you surely go to Sing Sing for seven years!

The horror of the possibilities of such wickedness is dulled by the common belief that no such thing would really happen—that the police do not, as a matter of fact, "frame-up" innocent people. But so long a time that Mayor Gaynor himself in a public complaint has charged the police with the practice of making "frame-ups" of innocent people.

Major Gaynor's charges were brought forth in the case of a boy who had been "framed-up" in Brooklyn and had a very narrow escape from being "framed" into Sing Sing. In 1917 this boy, George R. Duffy, was arrested as a suspicious person, taken to Police Headquarters and photographed for the "Rogue" Gallery, and the next day taken before a Magistrate and discharged. The boy's father then sought to have the picture removed from the "Rogue" Gallery, without avail. Judge Gaynor was appealed to, and he made similar efforts, but the Commissioner refused to depart from the rule of the department.

An Ingenious Police Trick

Three months later—the boy in the meantime having become obnoxious to the police because of the fact his case had stirred up—he was arrested on a charge of assault and highway robbery. Fortunately for the boy, the complainant insisted in the police court that he had been robbed by a man and not a boy, and that Duffy was not his assailant.

This arrest was a typical police "frame-up." It was brought about in this way: After the well-known East Side gambler Zelig had taken the complainant through the "Rogue" Gallery, pointed out Duffy's picture to him and convinced him that the photograph resembled the person who had robbed him. Upon the strength of that seeing the boy at all, he had been arrested.

Very often, of course, the complainant is so impressed by the photograph he is shown at Police Headquarters that when he is finally confronted with the man it represents he insists that the man is the person who robbed or assaulted him, as the case may be, and he may be quite sincere about it at that. If it works out that way the police are enabled to settle a score in a very simple manner without the slightest risk of a come-back.

As I have pointed out in a previous article, many of the Central Office detectives work in cahoots with pickpockets. If the pickpocket does not play fair he is in line for a "frame-up," and the scheme resorted to in the Duffy case is the one most frequently employed. Under the Sullivan law, of course, all the innocent persons need do is to charge the "dip" with "posting," but for such an offense the man gets only six months on the island—too mild a punishment for the serious crime of "holding out" on a police officer. He must be sent "up the river"—not only as punishment, but to show others of his kind that it is just as well to be "on the square" with the "coppers."

Accordingly the unfortunate "dip" is placed in the "Rogue" Gallery room by some complainant whom he may never even have seen, and when, in court, he is identified in person by the misguided but sincere complainant, he is generally convicted of the crime of grand larceny or highway robbery and sent to State prison. A "frame-up" of this kind would be considered a piece of police trickery by the man who had always led a clean life, but certainly no member of the underworld is proof against it.

There is a different kind of "frame-up" for different kinds of criminals. If a burglar, for instance, offends the police they do not resort to the method I have just described. There is a simpler way to frame him up. He is arrested as a suspicious person, and on the way to the station house a bunch of skeleton keys is dropped into his pocket to be found later on when he is searched. The charge, as entered on the blotter, is then converted into "carrying burglar's tools."

Vicious Sullivan Pistol Law

The importance of using the right kind of "frame-up" in a given case was well illustrated recently when a county detective charged a young man with whom he had had an altercation with being a burglar. It seems that the young man had gotten into the detective's house by mistake. A tussle followed, and the detective finally arrested his antagonist and charged him with attempted burglary. He produced a Jimmy and a bunch of skeleton keys, which he claimed he had found on the landing where he had found the prisoner.

At the trial the prisoner's possession of the Jimmy and skeleton keys was principally relied upon to establish the case against him. As it happened, however, the prisoner was able to show by reliable witnesses that he was a man of unimpeachable character, and he insisted that he had never seen the burglar's tools produced in evidence against him. Evidently the jury believed him, for he was acquitted.

Equally careless were the policemen accused of "framing-up" Big Jack Zelig. This alleged "frame-up," which, owing to the prominence it received through the Rosenthal murder case, is still fresh in the public mind, was typical of the methods employed by the police since the passing of the Sullivan anti-pistol law, which makes the carrying of a revolver a felony.

Big Jack Zelig was a notorious gambler and gangster. He was the close friend of the well-known East Side gambler Zelig. He was raided by Becker's squad through the instrumentality of rival gamblers. Fearing the vengeance of Zelig, the gamblers responsible for the raid made frantic efforts to have him put away. Through friendly police contacts it was arranged to "frame-up" Big Jack. How far the arrangement proceeded cannot be stated, but one night last May while seated at a table in a cafe at No. 78 Second avenue Zelig was approached by two police officers and told that he was wanted for "robbery."

Instantly he jumped up. "Look here, everybody," he shouted, lifting his coat-tails so as to expose his hip pockets. "I want you to see that I am unarmed. These cops are going to frame me!"

Having taken this precaution, Zelig went with his captors to the police station. There a search was made again, but no weapon was found. Zelig was then carried to the station house, where he was charged with carrying a concealed weapon, and a pistol, claimed to have been found in his right hand coat pocket, was produced. Numerous witnesses of the arrest at the cafe appeared before the District Attorney and related the occurrence as given above, and further investigation revealed the fact that the coat which Zelig had worn on the night of his arrest was made with patch pockets, in none of which was it possible to have stored the gun in question without its protruding itself way out of the pocket.

Upon the strength of these disclosures the officers who made the arrest were indicted for perjury, but the death of Zelig at the hands of "Red Phil" Dwyer and his work later removed the principal witnesses against them, and they will never be brought to trial.

The case with which crooked policemen can "frame-up" obnoxious gamblers since the Sullivan law came into existence has made the way of the gangster very hard. The gamblers are now absolutely at the mercy of the system.

This was well illustrated in the case of a gambler now in the Tombs awaiting an appeal from a conviction for carrying a gun. This gambler was the leader of a gang believed to have been concerned in many of the "stake-ups" to which East Side class dealers have been subjected. The witness declared that a rival gang leader known as "Shee" had retained him to assist in the case.

One of the policemen attached to the Union Market precinct went along with "Shee" gang to see that the "right" ones were arrested. In the mix-up which followed "Shee" was shot in the ear. Some said it was the cop who in his excitement fired the shot, but "Shee" insisted that it was one of the rival rangers, and he determined to get even with the leader of the gang.

Two Union Market policemen were ordered to go out and get the gang leader. He was arrested on a charge of carrying concealed weapons, although he had a dozen witnesses or more ready to swear that he was unarmed when taken into custody.

At the police court these witnesses appeared in the prisoner's behalf, but each was warned by policemen that if he didn't "beat it" he would be "framed" too.

The prisoner was accordingly held for "down-town."

When the case came up in General Sessions the prisoner's friends were again on hand to testify in his behalf. Again they were warned to "beat it" under threat of being "framed" if they didn't, and the consequence was that the gambler was found guilty of a crime of which he was probably entirely innocent, although, of course, it is quite possible that he had been arrested a day earlier or a day later sufficient evidence would have been found on him to have warranted his conviction, for there is no doubt that he was a gangster, and a bad one at that.

The case illustrates, however, the power of the system to "frame-up" those who resist its rule, or who, for some other reason, get into its way.

How Uncle Sam Is Using the Craters of His Hawaiian Volcanoes for Forts

THE extinct volcanic craters of Hawaii are being utilized by the American army as the best of the island.

The vent holes which once belched fire and destruction upon the island now serve as fortifications against the enemy.

Three volcanoes have been selected to be fitted with guns and other heavy armaments.

The volcanoes selected by the army are all on the island of Oahu, which is the largest of the Hawaiian Islands.

The use of these volcanoes is part of the military plan for the defense of the Hawaiian Islands.
